CHAPTER I.

"UP WITH YOUR HANDS!"

Suddenly the whistle of the locomotive emitted a series of ear-splitting shrieks, and the instant application of the air-brakes and the rasping of the wheels on the rails told the startled passengers that some fearful danger threatened them.

Alarmed exclamations followed, and the people hastily threw up windows and thrust out their heads, while others ran to the platforms of the cars, and, clinging to the guard's bars, looked far over to one side and peered anxiously ahead to learn the cause of the alarm.

But not one of the exclamations was true.
